ALLAN AND FAWN SEE BUILDINGS CRUMBLE, THE WATERS RISE, MEN FALL INTO YAWNING CHASMS — — —

WE'VE GOT TO GET OUT OF HERE! IT ISN'T SAFE!

LET ME DOWN! I'VE GOT TO HELP THOSE POOR MEN! LET ME GO!

CRAZY GIRL! ALL THE TIME TRYING TO GET INTO TROUBLE!

I DON'T KNOW WHETHER ALLAN IS A COWARD, OR A BRAVE MAN — BUT HE ACTS LIKE A COWARD!

LUCKY FOR ME I KNEW FAWN WAS COMING DOWN HERE — I COULD MAKE PREPARATIONS!

I LEFT THE WING AND ALL THE SKYMAN'S REGALIA, JUST WHERE I COULD GET MY HANDS ON THEM!

TROUBLE FOLLOWS THAT DAME, LIKE THE BEE DOES THE FLOWER! I WOULD'VE WAGERED SOMETHING WOULD HAPPEN DOWN HERE — AND IT SURE HAS!

THE SKYMAN IS OFF TO THE RESCUE — —

WHAT AN ODD AIRPLANE!

OH, HEAVENS! IT'S THE WING, AND THE SKYMAN!

BIG SHOT COMICS

GRAB HOLD! THE GROUND IS STARTING TO SHAKE AGAIN!

I SURE WILL! WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO?

OH!

I'LL YELL WHEN I CAN TELL!

I OUGHT TO ADVOCATE A CAMPAIGN FOR MORE DOORS IN THE ROOF! IT WOULD MAKE MY VISITS EASIER!

OH, WELL, THE SKYLIGHT'S SERVED ME MORE THAN ONCE! I'LL ENTER THAT WAY!

UNKNOWN TO THE DARING SKYMAN, DE CARVA IS AWARE OF HIS PLANE - - -

AN ODD LOOKING PLANE TO GO FLYING OVER THE HOUSE! I THINK I'LL ASK ITS OCCUPANTS, TO PAY ME A VISIT!

THIS LITTLE AIRPLANE MAGNET OF MINE, WILL BRING, EVEN AN UNWILLING GUEST TO SEE ME!

IT IS FAWN CARROLL'S TURN TO FEEL HELPLESS - - -

NO MATTER HOW MUCH POWER I APPLY - WE GO BACKWARDS!

COME OUT, ALL OF YOU!
COME OUT, I SAY!

A GIRL AND A COUPLE OF MEN! HOW DID YOU FIND THIS PLACE? WHO IS THE LEADER AMONG YOU?

THE SKYMAN WILL -

KEEP QUIET! HE -

WELL, FANS, HOW DO YOU LIKE JEFF THE SPYCHIEF AS THAT MASTER OF ACTION, AND CHAMPION OF LIBERTY, THE CLOAK? WRITE IN AND LET US HEAR FROM YOU!

SABOTAGE IN THE SOUTH

Jeff Cardiff, popularly known as the Spy Chief, tackles a tough assignment in the pine country of Georgia. By his side races Rex, police dog extraordinary, tracking and scenting saboteurs who seek to undermine the morale of the nation.

JEFF strode briskly into the walnut-paneled office in the F.B.I. Building in Washington. "Morning, Chief—you sent for me?"

"Yes, I did. Sit down and I'll explain what it's all about." His superior indicated a chair by the side of his desk. "During the past few weeks we've been in close touch with Army Headquarters down in Camp Benson—that's the new camp they've just built down in Georgia. They've informed us that many strange things have been taking place down there, incidents that definitely point to sabotage."

"Nations opposed to the strengthening of this country's defenses wouldn't hesitate to hinder or stop the progress whenever or wherever it were possible," said Jeff, "and it's up to us to guard against these hidden menaces and attacks."

The Chief smiled grimly. "To be more precise, in this case it'll be up to you to see that these acts of sabotage are stopped—once and for all."

"I'll do my best, Chief. When do I leave?"

"Immediately. Here are your tickets and papers of identification. When you arrive at Camp Benson report to General Crawford. He'll explain things more in detail to you and possibly give you a clue or two that may be helpful."

Bright sunlight flooded the station and dusty road as Jeff alighted from the train. The warm air was heavily laden with the pleasant odor of pines, a clean, refreshing scent that seemed to make the idea of spies and saboteurs as unreal and impossible as an invasion from Mars. Rex, the sleek police dog by Jeff's side, sensed the peacefulness of the surroundings and barked happily.

"Well, Cardiff, I'm certainly glad to have you with us," General Crawford welcomed him heartily, after Jeff had produced his credentials. "I suppose you know something of our problem down here?"

"Just general knowledge," Jeff admitted. "The Chief said you'd be more explicit being that you have first-hand information about these acts of sabotage."

The General nodded and proceeded to tell Jeff of the numerous incidents that had occurred, unmistakable signs of subversive activity in and around the camp. Telephone wires cut, the wall of a building collapsing, tinkering with the electrical supply and generators, now and again a case of food poisoning—these and many others, obviously the malicious acts of someone or a group of persons endeavoring to disrupt the orderly routine of camp life.

"Any clues that might possibly bear investigation, General?" Jeff asked.

"Absolutely none—except it seems reasonable to believe that the parties responsible for this devilish business are both here in the camp and on the outside. Just where to locate those persons, without arousing too much suspicion and publicity, will be your task. Frankly, I don't envy you, but I'll give you every bit of cooperation."

"My first step will be to circulate among the men, study the routine and layout of the camp. I thought the best pretense for doing this would be under the guise of a magazine writer—a staff reporter with an assignment to write an article dealing with camp life and activities."

"Splendid! Go to it and the best of luck."

THREE days passed and still nothing unusual had taken place. Jeff, with permission from headquarters to come and go as he pleased, had familiarized himself with the small city that housed three thousand American youths learning the fundamentals of defense. His next step was to make a survey of the surrounding countryside. It was quite apparent that with the exception of a few small farms scattered here and there, the land for miles about consisted of countless acres of tall, stately pine trees.

BIG SHOT COMICS

A narrow footpath, striking off from the main road leading from the camp, twisted and turned through the forest. The carpet of pine needles covering the ground made for pleasant walking and Jeff strolled along at a leisurely gait. Rex sniffed along by his side, occasionally darting off through the trees in search of a frightened rabbit. Suddenly Rex halted his playful scampering and his sleek body became rigid. Low growls rumbled in his throat, his eyes fixed on the path that wound ahead.

Jeff stopped and scratched his ear. "What's up, old man? What's the trouble?"

Rex continued his throaty growls and Jeff proceeded along the trail, his footsteps muffled in the cushiony rug of the needles. Presently he stopped and stared into a small clearing. To come upon a spot such as this was unusual enough, but the sight of a sprawling, squat building and a radio antenna whose towers barely rose above the tops of the pines was frankly surprising.

Army Headquarters mustn't know about this little hideout, else General Crawford most certainly would have mentioned it, thought Jeff. He whispered a soft instruction to Rex to follow and he left the path and slipped through the trees. Silently he circled the building, absorbing every detail and trying to fathom the meaning of its presence here in the deserted pine forest of northern Georgia.

He had almost circumnavigated the clearing when he heard the voices of approaching men. He ducked behind the trunk of a stout tree and Rex slumped to the ground, silent and motionless. The voices became more audible and out into the clearing stepped three men. Two were in civilian clothes, but the third was garbed in the khaki outfit of the regular army. They made directly for the entrance to the building, one of them unlocking the door with a key. Then they entered and the door was closed.

"Stay right here, Rex," Jeff commanded. "I'm going to work my way closer and see if I can't find out what this is all about."

Noiselessly he sidled up to the building, carefully keeping out of sight of the window that opened out on his side of the house. He reached the wall and, pressing himself against it, inched his way to the window till he was within earshot of the voices that floated out: "... it was pretty close going but I made it. It didn't take me more than a minute to dispose of the stuff."

"Fine!" said a second voice. "But don't take any unnecessary chances. It's much safer to build this thing up by small steps... it's equally important to weaken the morale of the soldiers as it is to disrupt the mechanism of the camp."

"When will that bomb explode?" a third voice asked.

"In about two hours," the first man replied, "and mark my words, half the electrical equipment will be destroyed."

"Splendid! I'll inform our leader immediately of this latest development."

Jeff's mouth was set in a grim line and the muscles of his jaw tightened. He had heard enough to convince him that he had stumbled on a nest of saboteurs, the persons who had been causing the damaging incidents in Camp Benson. Unobserved, he slipped back to where Rex still snuggled on the ground waiting for him. The dog's cold nose sniffed inquiringly as Jeff took out a small pad and hurriedly scribbled a message to General Crawford. Then rolling it into a ball he gave it to Rex. "Take it back to the camp, Rex—take it right to General Crawford. You know who he is—the fellow who's been giving you the candy every day!"

The dog held the ball of paper in his mouth and leaped off through the woods in the direction of Camp Benson. Jeff's eyes followed him till he was out of sight. Then he drew out his automatic and moved among the trees, reaching the path he had originally used when he approached the clearing. He waited some fifteen minutes before the door of the house opened and the man in uniform appeared. He waved a farewell to his companions, crossed the clearing and marched along the pathway, passing within three yards of where Jeff was hidden. Jeff stepped behind him and pressed the muzzle of the gun against the man's ribs. "One sound and I'll shoot!" Jeff cautioned coldly. He ordered him ahead for fifty yards or so and then placed a gag over the man's mouth, binding his hands back of him.

"Now step right along, brother. You and General Crawford and I are going to have a round table session!"

Half an hour later an army truck rumbled into view. General Crawford sat beside the driver and in the rear were half a dozen soldiers, rifles set for action. "I received your message, Cardiff, and thanks to Rex here, we discovered where those fellows planted that time-bomb."

"Well, here's the baby who's been doing the dirty work in the camp. The other two are still back in their hideout. I dare say they'll be quite surprised when you call on them. And I'm sure you'll be surprised at the amount of equipment they've got there—a regular radio station with a powerful transmitter."

The General patted Rex on the head and addressed Cardiff, "The country should be proud to have men like you at its beck and call. Yes, and animals like this fellow here!"

"It's all in the line of duty, General," Jeff replied. "The safety of America should be the first and foremost thought of every one living here!"
